Did you know...

-Children are often unable to verbalize their dental pain. Teachers may notice a child who is having difficulty attending to tasks or who is demonstrating the effects of pain—anxiety, fatigue, irritability, depression, and withdrawal from normal activities.

-School nurses report a range of oral health problems such as dental caries, gingival disease, malocclusion (poor bite), loose teeth, and oral trauma in children.12

-When children's acute dental problems are treated and they are not experiencing pain, their learning and school-attendance records improve!
